The Story of Crocodile Mick and “GERMAN Jack” Kiel

Crocodile Mick's is a small, family business operating for over 30 years now.

It started with German Jack,(Jack Kiel) who was a founder first started back in the 1950's working the top end of Australia ~ then through to Papua New Guinea as a Crocodile Hunter. Jack was working from the Fly River in New Guinea, to the Northern Territory and Queensland in the skin market only.

It was in New Guinea where Jack learnt the art of taxidermy of crocodiles; he started because they had an abundance of small animals, which never fetched much on the open skin market due to their size.

This encouraged Jack to venture out into the value adding the crocodiles and became a Master Craftsman of crocodile products. So it wasn't long before the German had it down pat and was stuffing up to half a dozen, two to three foot crocs per day.

He meet Mick Pitman around the late 70's and took him on. Jack taught Mick the trade and together they created fine leather and products from the crocodile. Together they worked on producing the best quality crocodile leather in a natural way.

To date we are the only business that we know of which produces Naturally Tanned Crocodile Skins, which are now sort after world wide!

They did not use any chemicals in making the leather, only using bush bark to tan the crocodile skins. The German had a real passion for the crocodile and this started a partnership with Mick, they hunted together and produced products in the bush. They both lived in the bush in very hash conditions, the crocodile was their main source of income. The German took on Mick as his own son, they were very close, until the German was sadly murder when he came out of the bush in 1990 for two cartoons of beer.

He is sadly missed by all that knew him.

German Jack with a table of crocodile skins

Mick promised the German that he would continue on their work. So Mick went it alone after Jack was murdered and now produces some of the best crocodile taxidermy in the world and is the only business we know of that produces crocodile skins naturally tanned without using harmful chemicals. This is a family tradition that is driven by the relationship between Jack and Mick
